President Jerry Parker announced on Monday that the living dead will no longer be eligible to attend classes at any DCCC campus. The decision was made following several incidents involving the biting of living students.

"In the interest of protecting the student body from an increasing number of attacks by flesh-eating zombies, we will no longer accept any student who might turn others into a member of the undead," Parker said during a press conference.

Although zombies already enrolled at DCCC will not be forced to drop or transfer classes, the banning of future enrollments signals the end of an integrated campus.

"Absolutely outrageous," said Duane Jones, spokesperson for the Undead Student Council. "Not all of us crave human flesh at all times. The entire zombie student body is being punished for the mistakes of the few."

According to campus security reports, although Joseph Rhodes, the problem was large enough to warrant the actions that have been taken. "We had four students bitten and turned into zombies just last semester," Rhodes said. "Zombies simply cannot keep themselves from eating people."

Rhodes also said that the issue of cleanliness and sanitation played a factor in the decision. "Zombies are walking around carrying who knows how many diseases," Rhodes said. "I mean they're dead, they're all messed up."

But zombies disagree.

"Give me a break, we all take showers just like a normal person does right?" said Jones. "Just an ear or finger may fall off from time to time, but we aren't walking bundles of the plague."

THE COMMUNIST

"They're dead; they're all messed up," says Joseph Rhodes.

"Buying the stairway to heaven"

By Lisa Foreman

Due to recent legal problems, the Roman Catholic Church has decided to reinstate the old practice of selling indulgences.

The Church is famous for being one of the wealthiest in the world. The Vatican itself is supposedly home to millions of dollars worth of artwork.

However, recent molestation charges against members of the holy order have dramatically cut into the church’s profits. It has been forced to pay out millions of dollars both in settlement and “hush” money.

The number of practicing churchgoers has also been declining, partly due to the scandals. People are donating less time and money.

“We made $300 trillion this year,” said Charles Grey, a Vatican official. “That is simply not enough. We have never had such discrimination, according to the ACLU, who has nominated for the Gould Award several times. It is not the first time Paterno has been accused of a crime. According to anonymous sources, in 1987, Paterno volunteered at a retirement home and left suddenly when residents went missing.

One of the elderly patients, who declined to give his name, reported feeling uneasy around Paterno, saying, “He would rig the bingo tournaments in his favor. The prize was always a bowl of pudding or late night movie privileges. Whenever someone else shouted “Bingo!” Mr. Paterno would stare at him coldly and then the next night the resident would be missing.”

Police and marathon officials have stated that Paterno will be subjected to further drug testing this week. In Medicine, a DCCC professor, has been nominated for the Gould Award several times. The decision was made following several incidents involving the biting of living students.

"I think it’s great," said Jenny Juyle. "I mean I’m rich. I can buy everything else, and now finally heaven! How sweet is that?"

The Catholic Church believes that selling indulgences will encourage growth. Since they will make heaven much more accessible than other religions, their membership should double. Church officials claim it is the way to world peace. People will flock to the church andumb, ending all wars.

"We will be stimulating the work force," said the Rev. Kyle Smith. "If people want to sin and not do hard labor, then they will need money. The more people working, the better the global economy. So this is essentially the dead, is entitled access to higher education."

Cooper said. “Just because a segment of the population are rotting bags of flesh does not mean that they should be denied the benefits of a college education."

According to Cooper, DCCC is in violation of its own mission statement, which is to “offer educational programs and services that are accessible...in order to enhance the development of the community and residents of its service area.”

Cooper charged that zombies are residents of the community and should therefore be guaranteed the opportunity to enroll.

“We don’t let students bring loaded guns to school and the mouth of a zombie is just the same,” Rhodes said. “Those teeth are deadly weapons, that exempts zombies from the rights given to those who don’t go around eating people all the time.”

Parker said he regrets having to make this decision, but he is adamant that the greater good is being served.

“We empathize with the undead community,” he said, “but this is necessary so that our students will stop being devoured by their peers.”

You won’t be smiling in jail, druggie.

By EJ Crawford

DCCC professor David Paterno may have to forfeit his winning of the charitable Marathon for Desease Cats after high amounts of PCP, cocaine, and bovine growth hormones were found in his blood system Sept. 14 in Media, Pa.

The marathon was organized to help raise money to find a cure for dying and diseased cats. Paterno, a self-proclaimed animal lover, has denied taking illegal drugs to enhance his performance.

"Can I get a break every now and then?" he asked a reporter. “I mean come the [expletive]on, people? Who are you trying to impress? I am a well-respected educatorial person, and I would never do coke or booze or smack to win a race. Screw you."

Many of Paterno’s friends and family have rallied behind him, saying he is a popular student gets sweet parking spot

By Joe Smith

Controlling Delaware and Chester Counties

Volume 10, No. 1

October 3, 2007

page 6

Student proves country music sucks

photo courtesy of dtjohnson.com

You won’t be smiling in jail, druggie.

By EJ Crawford

DCCC professor David Paterno may have to forfeit his winning of the charitable Marathon for Desease Cats after high amounts of PCP, cocaine, and bovine growth hormones were found in his blood system Sept. 14 in Media, Pa.

The marathon was organized to help raise money to find a cure for dying and diseased cats. Paterno, a self-proclaimed animal lover, has denied taking illegal drugs to enhance his performance.

"Can I get a break every now and then?" he asked a reporter. “I mean come the [expletive]on, people? Who are you trying to impress? I am a well-respected educatorial person, and I would never do coke or booze or smack to win a race. Screw you."

Many of Paterno’s friends and family have rallied behind him, saying he is a popular student gets sweet parking spot

By Joe Smith

Controlling Delaware and Chester Counties

Volume 10, No. 1

October 3, 2007

page 6

Science proves country music sucks

Continued on page 2

Page 10, No. 1

October 3, 2007

page 13

Professor implicated in doping scandal

By Joe Smith

Controlling Delaware and Chester Counties

Volume 10, No. 1

October 3, 2007
I like eggs

By Joe Smith

Let me take this opportunity to illustrate to our loyal readers just how much I love eggs. The cornerstone of any meal of substance, the humble egg stands alone atop the pantheon of foods that are awesome.

Invented in 1604 by French scientist Jacques de Puille, this miracle of human innovation has been fortifying bodies with essential vitamins and minerals ever since. Studies have shown that people who eat eggs on a regular basis are more likely to succeed and are far more attractive to the opposite sex. Eggs can help you win boxing matches, too. Just ask Rocky Balboa. If Apollo Creed had charged some yolk in a dingy Philadelphia apartment, he probably would have knocked the Italian Stallion’s head clean off of his shoulders.

Why, just this morning I had an enormous plate of the scrambled goodness. Being the adventurous fellow I am, I lathered some bacon and the party was on. People may think that eggs are breakfast exclusive, but nothing could be further from the truth. Eggs can, and should, be eaten at every meal at all times. In fact, here’s a free culinary tip: try liquefying some eggs in a blender and pour them over your choice of lamb or chicken as a substitute for tomato sauce. Delicious!

I could go on for ages about my friend the egg, but space constraints won’t allow it. I leave you with this parting word of advice: the next time someone tries to belittle eggs in front of you, stick up for nature’s beautiful nuggets and punch them in the teeth.

By Ryan McBrearty

Monday morning already? Time to slip on your Windsor-knotted noose, hop into that piece of crap you call a car and sit in traffic with all the other undervalued, white-collar cubicle monkeys. At least things are looking up when you’re driving your 1979 Pontiac and your Windsor-stitched noose, hop into that piece of crap you call a car and sit in traffic with all the other undervalued, white-collar cubicle monkeys. At least things are looking up when you’re driving your 1979 Pontiac and...

So you want to call out sick

Prepare for the call

Know who you’re calling. Don’t call your boss directly when you can talk to a reliable coworker instead and have him or her unknowingly lie for you. A secretary like Hubert is a perfect patsy. “I don’t care if the man in the next cubicle told you to call me in and I don’t care if the guy in the next cubicle told you to call me in and I don’t care if the guy in the next cubicle told you to call me in—”

Case of the Mondays? Call out sick.

Hubert is a perfect patsy. “I don’t care if the person is actually sick,” she says. “It’s not like I’m the one not getting paid for the day.”

If you are one of the poor, pathetic souls who handles the daily call-outs, the most important factor to keep in mind is to make the call convincing after the fact is to be called out sick.

First, make sure you call from a quiet place. Typically, if you’re out and about, the solitude of your car is the safest bet. Just make sure the engine isn’t running, or your boss will either know you’re lying or have a sneaking suspicion that you’re about to blow it.

Next, prepare to make your ailments choice as audibly convincing as possible. If you decided you have a cold, try sounding like a piece of cotton up your nose to sound groggy. To make a stomach flu believable, use your foramen to press on your diaphragm while you speak. You can also sound congested by having a sneezing fit. Practice what you’re going to say before you hang up. You can also sound congested by having a sneezing fit. Practice what you’re going to say before you hang up. You can also sound congested by having a sneezing fit. Practice what you’re going to say before you hang up.

If you spend the day outside, be sure to wear sunscreen. “A woman in our engineering department called out sick once,” said Hubert. She claimed to have a stomach virus but came back to work with all the symptoms of a hangover. “I see this all the time!”

Also, avoid eating at restaurants near your office. The first thing your coworkers will be to see is you being served by a boss or coworker, unless you feel like lying about having a stomach virus or being the recipient of the miraculous healing power of Jesus. You won’t just be risking your dignity or your credibility; you’ll be risking your livelihood.

When you return to work, remember to fake some sort of lingering effects of whatever illness you chose. Avoid eating a big lunch if you want anyone to believe that you were throwing up a day earlier. Blow your nose and speak with a scratchy voice if you claimed to have had the flu.

Also, a very effective way of making your sickness convincing after the fact is to blame someone else. If a coworker or an intern or a janitor was recently out sick, say you got it from him. This not only makes you believable, but is also an effective way of making the entire office treat the person like a leper for the next couple days.

So that’s it. You’re home free. You got a free day in your bed or at the beach and your boss is none the wiser. Go. You just don’t want anyone to know that you didn’t have enough money to pay off the student loan you had to take out to go to college to get the degree to get that piece of crap job in the first place.

The opinions expressed in the editorial directly reflect those of The Communist staff or college. We do not welcome your comments on any matter relating to Delaware County Community College, or any other college.

The Communist is produced by both current and former students of Fundamentals of Journalism I in collaboration with Campus Life. Students who would like to write for the campus newspaper and have already completed Fundamentals of Journalism I should register for Fundamentals of Journalism II (ENG 131). Students who have completed both classes are welcome to join the staff.

Joe Smith
Iron Hand of Judgment
Lisa Freeman
Hippie Collaborator

Alkendria Serikpo
Master and Commander of Graphic Arts

Propagandists
Kelli Collins
EJ Crawford
Kelli Collins
Catherine Ghidelli
Ryan McBrearty
Kenneth Smyth

University of Pittsburgh
Office of Admissions and Financial Aid
www.pitt.edu/~oafa • 412-624-8777(7488)
Spear's leaves the party with Cris Angel. Police broke up the fight and ordered guests to leave the hotel, but the party continued on to Angel's Las Vegas residence.

Witnesses told police that Spears, still wearing her performance outfit, was trapped on the ground floor and had to be led to a top floor by Angel to save her face from a table after the row. Spears was waving his hands, saying, "I’m here, I'm sorry." Police arrested a suspect on the ground floor, but the suspect was later released.

By Kenneth Sroth

According to theologians, an increase in the number of the wealthy and famous individuals apparently triggered intense devotion to Jesus Christ. From death row inmates to celebrities to the common sinner, Jesus is becoming more appealing to anyone with a guilty conscience in need of repentance.

Eventually, Jesus was seen trying to win the souls of NFL icons engaging in animal cruelty. Michael Vick, whose latest indictment charges that the young athlete was involved in dog fighting, was seen winning over owners, owning, operating and facilitating a K-9 combat ring, reciting being visited by several dogs during a dog fight he oversaw a week ago.

According to Vick, Jesus and three angels were present at the dogfighting event, which came to a barking halt when Vick was apprehended by police.

Jesus defended his angel's posse and humbly denied any wrongdoing, saying, "I am omnipotent; therefore, that's impossible. I would not intentionally harm anyone or anything, including animals."

According to Vick, the athlete and Jesus have teamed up to form the Recovering Dog-Fight-aholics Against Sinners (RDFAS). "The idea is to lure in those tempted by illegitimate monetary gain and a desire to observe animal fighting," said a RDFAS spokesperson. "Once we have them hooked, we send in holy members from our organization to pitfalls into their sin and to accept Jesus into their lives.”

Evangelical Christians are skeptical about such claims, church officials are calling the "new found faith" approach to winning converts. But the idea of Christ wallowing in sin, waiting for wrong doers, has ignited a controversy among the faithful, according to a recent opinion poll. “We don’t want our Lord and Savior getting too close to sin,” said one church official. "He needs to stay far and clear of evil in order to safely lead us from sin. If Jesus continues down this bold and daring path to save these poor souls, he just might end up falling victim to temptation.”

Greenpeace fights for greenery

By Catherine Gledhill

TOKYO: Greenpeace protesters stopped traffic Monday, vehemently chanting, “Flower Power!” in front of a government-funded science laboratory used to experiment on plant life. Japanese scientists are allegedly studying the adverse effects of verbal abuse on young seedlings.

“They don’t see the devastation caused by their experiments on these plants,” one protester said. “Plants start out with so much potential to grow. Then scientists poison their minds with destructive taunts. They say, ‘You’re a bad plant, you’re a stupid plant, and you’re ugly.’ ”

Scientist hypothesizes that plants bargoed with negative comments stop growing. Those that receive praise such as, “You’re a good plant, a beautiful shiny green plant, and you’re my best friend, plant,” exceed growth expectations.

"If you’re looking for trouble, you came to the right place. If you’re looking for trouble, just look right at my face," Spears cooed, showing no signs of lip syncing the work of a song performed in the same town for the same purpose by Elvis Presley a mere 39 years ago.

After performing her new single, “Gimme More,” several news sources said that Spears was frustrated with her new look, ‘Cris Angel’. She was also seen acting a little out of character, dancing and gyrate with her sister, Jaden James, doing a silly dance and high boots, making everyone feel that she was able to dance and gyrate with heels that high.

"If you’re looking for trouble, you came to the right place. If you’re looking for trouble, just look right at my face," Spears cooed, showing no signs of lip syncing the work of a song performed in the same town for the same purpose by Elvis Presley a mere 39 years ago.

After performing her new single, “Gimme More,” several news sources said that Spears was frustrated with her new look, ‘Cris Angel’. She was also seen acting a little out of character, dancing and gyrate with her sister, Jaden James, doing a silly dance and high boots, making everyone feel that she was able to dance and gyrate with heels that high.

By Matthew Eppright

Sally McNabée daughter Tracy, 11, looked up at her mother one afternoon and said with her bright brown eyes twinkling, “Mommy, I want to be famous!”

Instead of looking for agents, getting headshots, going to auditions, McNabée knew exactly the first step to take in order to make her daughter’s wish come true: Bad Boot Camp.

The camp was founded just last year by Hollywood party girl Tara Reid who knew exactly the first step to take in order to transform herself into something more noticeable. The final choice: Tracy Trouble (pronounced True-May). "I feel so French," Trouble said. "J’adore Trouble."

With new hot looks the girls are then whisked away to the cafeteria to be introduced to their new diet. The camp does not serve breakfast or dinner, instead concentrating on one big meal each day. Lunch consists of four carrot sticks for each girl along with the camp’s signature cocktail, a mixture of Red Bull, Vodka, and a juice served in a martini glass. "We want the girls to feel the high of a cocktail, but we’re not going to give them a beer," Reid said. "Girls don’t have morals."

Throughout each day the girls attend classes to hone their celebrity skills. In the morning they have their hot-spot information classes to hone their celebrity skills. In the morning they have their hot-spot information sessions in which they are shown slides of the clubs they may be seen at in the major cities. Following this the girls are taught boyfriend etiquette. They learn who is appropriate to date, who will get you photographed, and where to find the guys with the most money.

A big chunk of the day is taken by the camp’s biggest selling point, D.U.I. practice. The camp counselors cover each girl’s right eye, spin them around vigorously, and then put them on bikes. “If I drive into the lake, a tree or a consumer, I know I’m doing it right,” Trouble said.

Other classes at the camp include: Purgung 101, Fake DJ, Paparazzi Posing, Pasties Today: Yes/No?, and Wardrobe Malfunctions Made Easy.

The last day at most camps is usually a sad one, but not for Bad Boot Camp. The girls walk out on a red carpet where they are photographed by the paparazzi and get the chance to practice the wardrobe malfunctions they’ve spent so many hours studying. Since arriving home, Trouble is now the most photographed girl for her school newspaper. Her mother is ecstatic with the results and will be sending her back to Bad Boot Camp next year.

“I am so proud of her new celebrity skills," McNabée said. “After a few more years at camp I know she will be in the tabloids, and hopefully have her first rehab stay.”

By Kelli Connor

The pop music industry has lost one of its brightest stars.

No, really. She’s lost.

MTV’s annual gala of the most celebrated musical artists in the universe, outlining even the Grammy’s, the Video Music Awards began with a performance from superstar Britney Spears. Known for her iconic, and her upstanding morals and ethics, Spears opened the VMA’s wearing a classic black-studded bra and panties number and high boots, making even the physicists wonder how she was able to dance and gyrate with heels that high.

The boot camp was founded just last year by Bad Boot Camp. The camp is used to teach girls all that they will need to know to make it in the community,” Reid said. “We are teaching these girls all that they will need to know to make it in the community,” Reid said. “We are teaching these girls that this is the life, and if you do it, you will be in the tabloids, and hopefully have her first rehab stay.”

By Kelli Connor

Boot camp spawns bad girls

Tracy McNabée was able to keep her first name, but last needed to be transformed into something more noticeable. The final choice: Tracy Trouble (pronounced True-May). "I feel so French," Trouble said. "J’adore Trouble."

With new hot looks the girls are then whisked away to the cafeteria to be introduced to their new diet. The camp does not serve breakfast or dinner, instead concentrating on one big meal each day. Lunch consists of four carrot sticks for each girl along with the camp’s signature cocktail, a mixture of Red Bull, Vodka, and a juice served in a martini glass. "We want the girls to feel the high of a cocktail, but we’re not going to give them a beer," Reid said. "Girls don’t have morals."

Throughout each day the girls attend classes to hone their celebrity skills. In the morning they have their hot-spot information sessions in which they are shown slides of the clubs they may be seen at in the major cities. Following this the girls are taught boyfriend etiquette. They learn who is appropriate to date, who will get you photographed, and where to find the guys with the most money.

A big chunk of the day is taken by the camp’s biggest selling point, D.U.I. practice. The camp counselors cover each girl’s right eye, spin them around vigorously, and then put them on bikes. “If I drive into the lake, a tree or a consumer, I know I’m doing it right,” Trouble said.

Other classes at the camp include: Purgung 101, Fake DJ, Paparazzi Posing, Pasties Today: Yes/No?, and Wardrobe Malfunctions Made Easy.

The last day at most camps is usually a sad one, but not for Bad Boot Camp. The girls walk out on a red carpet where they are photographed by the paparazzi and get the chance to practice the wardrobe malfunctions they’ve spent so many hours studying. Since arriving home, Trouble is now the most photographed girl for her school newspaper. Her mother is ecstatic with the results and will be sending her back to Bad Boot Camp next year.

“I am so proud of her new celebrity skills," McNabée said. “After a few more years at camp I know she will be in the tabloids, and hopefully have her first rehab stay.”

By Kelli Connor

Source: bootcamp@dccc.edu

The fall for a book committee is also working with the Delaware County Department of Veterans Affairs, the Pennsylvania Veterans Museum, the Delaware County Intermediate Unit, and the Delaware County Literacy Council on events and materials.

For more information, visit www.Delcolibraries.org.

Author James Bradley Visits DCCC

Author James Bradley will visit DCCC Oct. 21 as part of Fall for a Book.

This year’s selection, Flags of Our Fathers by James Bradley, tells the story of the six Marines photographed raising the American flag on Mount Suribachi at the battle of Iwo Jima, a scene that has become an enduring image of World War II. Author James Bradley, the son of one of the flag-raisers, also developed an abridged version of the book for young readers called Flags of Our Fathers: Heroes of Iwo Jima. In 2006, Clint Eastwood directed a film based on the book, as well as a film from the Japanese perspective called Letters from Iwo Jima.

Author James Bradley will visit the Community College, the Pennsylvania Veterans Museum, and the Astor Community Center and Public Library.

Bradley will arrive at the College at 1:15 p.m. on October 21. His visit will be followed by a book-signing. Free tickets for this event can be picked up at the Campus Center beginning at 1. For more information, call 610-359-5341 or email amc14@dccc.edu.

As well as the author visits, there will be many local events in public libraries, book discussion groups, veterans speakers, and programs about their Iwo Jima experiences, and film screenings.

This is real! We promise!
Transfer to Arcadia and Study in Italy

Are You Ready to Transfer?

Arcadia Offers a World of Opportunities to Transfer Students

- Italy Preview and other opportunities to go abroad
  Find out more at www.arcadia.edu/italy_preview.
- Up to 75 credits accepted from a 2 year school
- Assured admission to select graduate programs including Physician Assistant and Physical Therapy
- Scholarships ranging from $5,000 to $12,000 as well as personalized financial aid counseling
- Near public transportation
- On campus housing available for transfer students including apartment-style living

Monday, October 15
Attend Arcadia’s Transfer Evaluation Day
Noon to 6:30, Grey Towers Castle

- Bring your transcript for a credit evaluation.
- Get advice on courses to take before you transfer.
- Find out about scholarships, grants and loans.

Contact us to see how credits will transfer to Arcadia and to register for this event.
Visit www.arcadia.edu/transfer.

admiss@arcadia.edu • www.arcadia.edu/transfer • 1-877-ARCADIA (1-877-272-2342)